

D. W. DUTTON

Aeronautical DEPARTMENT Engineering

The School of Aeronautical Engineering was established in 1933 through a gift of $300,000 from the Daniel Guggenheim Fund for the promotion of aeronautics. The purpose of this award was to establish opportunities at the Georgia Institute of Technology for the study and research of the highest order in the field of aeronautics.

The recent progress in the fields of jet propulsion, rocket power and supersonic flight makes the course in aeronautical engineering especially significant. In addition to the undergraduate curriculum, advanced work is offered for those desiring graduate study at the master's level, and plans are in the making for offering the doctorate. Opportunities are also afforded for research.

The physical plant, housed in two buildings on the campus and a hangar on the nearby Marietta Air Base, is well equipped for offering laboratory work to augment and lend interest to the theoretical course. Most of this equipment is also suitable for research projects. Both study and research are facilitated by the accessibility of the special library reference collection maintained in the center of the plant.

Architecture

DEPARTMENT

The primary aim of the School of Architecture is to provide a broad and thorough preparation for future architects through the course designated Architectural Design. Architectural Engineering is offered as a second option for those who may wish to engage in the practice of architecture or allied fields as specialists in construction.

With the advent of industry in the South, a need has been seen for a course in Industrial Design to give adequate preparation, with a technological background, for men entering this new profession. While this course was inaugurated before the war, a full offering of courses awaits a new building.

Ceramics

In 1923 the School of Ceramic Engineering was organized at Georgia Tech. Prior to this time the ceramic and mineral industries had grown to such a degree that a department somewhere in the South was considered necessary. There was an urgent need for a laboratory to which the industries could turn for advice and for aid in the solution of their problems. And so a number of industrial leaders considered the matter and finally decided that, due to its location and prominence in engineering education, the Georgia Institute of Technology was a logical place in which to establish a department.

The course of instruction covers a period of four years and leads to the degree of Bachelor of Ceramic Engineering. It is so arranged that upon graduation a student has the foundation that should enable him to succeed in production, research, administration and sales of any of the ceramic industries.

Chemical Engineering

The first degree in Chemical Engineering was awarded in 1903. Since then over eight hundred more have been conferred. On the graduate level courses are offered leading to the degrees of Master of Science and Doctor of Philosophy.

The School of Chemical Engineering provides excellent training for the five hundred undergraduates in that field and offers many courses required by the curricula of other schools. The need of industry for trained men in this field will always be great and Georgia Tech graduates will continue in key positions in this highly technical phase of production. The success of these graduates in their profession attests the high standards of the School of Chemical Engineering.

DEPARTMENT

The School of Chemistry at Georgia Tech instructs all freshmen in the basic course in general chemistry and in addition serves several Schools of Engineering by offering more advanced courses and laboratories required by their courses of study.

The school offers a curriculum leading to the Bachelor of Science in Chemistry and graduate courses leading to the Master of Science degree. It is on the accredited list of the American Chemical Society, and many of its graduates have continued in graduate work and now hold the Ph.D. degree.

Civil Engineering DEPARTMENT

Civil Engineering is the oldest of the engineering professions. The civil engineer works in the broad fields of surveying and mapping, sanitation, transportation, hydraulics, structures, mining, irrigation and reclamation.

It is the civil engineer who designs and builds highways, railways, airports, structures of all types and sizes, dams, sewerage and water supply systems, harbors, bridges, docks, tunnels, aqueducts, reclamation systems for swamps and wastelands, river system developments, and irrigation projects.

The School of Civil Engineering supplements the classroom work with training in four laboratories. These are in soil mechanics, hydraulics, highway and concrete materials, and sanitary.

The curriculum of the School of Electrical Engineering is planned to give a comprehensive training in the fundamental sciences. It provides for adequate training in the scientific and applied aspects of important branches of engineering other than electrical.

The electrical power engineering option has to do with the theoretical and practical phases of power generation, distribution and utilization. It deals with the principles of alternators, transformers, motors, converters and the transmission and distribution of electric power.

Students desiring to specialize in radio, electronics and telephony may choose the communications and electronics option. This option offers theory and laboratory courses in radio, electronics, telephony, wave filters, transmission lines, antennas and radiation.

General Engineering

DEPARTMENT

The Department of General Engineering provides a broad scope of training for prospective engineers. The curriculum is of an extremely technical nature and is chosen from the courses offered by the various schools of engineering. Since its inception in 1923 the department has produced over two hundred and fifty graduates whose training covered many phases of the engineering field.

Following the graduation in 1951 of all students now enrolled in the department it will be discontinued. Many factors, including the present demand for specialized training, have contributed to the dissolution.

Three prospective engineers pursue their studies in a Mechanical Engineering laboratory.

The increasing magnitude and complexity of modern industrial plants has demanded the development of a new branch of engineering now widely recognized as Industrial Engineering. The field of the industrial engineer is that of the process and production expert engaged in planning, organizing, improving, managing, and operating various processes for producing manufactured products of all kinds.

To meet the need of industry for this new type of engineer the School of Industrial Engineering was formed. The first degree of Bachelor of Industrial Engineering was awarded in 1946. Now the enrollment of the school is over six hundred.
