Quincy demands a recount for Heisman

By UGA VI
Stupid Mutt

Monday afternoon Josh Heupel of Oklahoma was awarded this year’s Heisman Trophy. Heupel passed for over 4,000 yards, ran for more than 900, and led his team to a difficult 9th consecutive win over Texas Tech last weekend. According to The University(sic) of Georgia, despite these compelling statistics, Heupel was far from a ‘shoe in’ for the Trophy. U(sic)GA seemed surprised when “candidate” Quincy Carter didn’t win the Award. “For months now, we known the [Heisman] race would be a close ‘en,” said coach Done-in of the Georgia Bulldogs. “We was hopein’ we could get a few more votes for ‘em from the people in Utah and Oregon, but it just didn’t happen.” It was a narrow margin, Heupel edging out Carter by a mear 53-3 vote.

After hearing the results Georgia students rioted, tearing all the shrubbery surrounding the field at Samford stadium and pulling down the newly painted goalposts. Students then reassembled at President Pih Sonem Daug’s front lawn, piling hedges in front of all doors to the house and building a tipi structure over the Presidents truck. Chanting “HANDCOUNT IS SMARTER, RECOUNT FOR CARTER!” students voiced their concern for the Heisman vote counting process. “I know I can win it, we need to continue the recount until I do...” Carter told the press .

Students feel it is the difficulty of recounting such a large ballot preventing officials from doing so. “We have plenty of counting majors here at the University, we could help if they need it...” said vice-president AdN. Istuff. This is true, Georgia has the largest (and only) School of Addition and Subtraction in the Nation with over 59 students (plus or minus 3).

Not only are SAS majors concerned with the count, but other ‘higher esteemed’ students are concerned for a more ethical decision. “What doe(th) a man have to du in thi(th) (th)ay to win (th)uch a big award? Con(th)i(th)tantly prove him(th)elf through hard work, dedic(th)on, and a will to (th)u(th)eed. Quin(th)yha(th)done that...” remarked an anonymous S.T.U.P.I.D major (STreet UPkeep and Inline-sewage Design). Most of the University(sic) finds themselves perplexed by the process.

The Heisman Board Officers say there is no recount plan as of now because there is no “reason” to develop such a plan.

This season has put quarterback Quincy Carter’s career into question. In this play, he’s proving that he is better at blocking than he is at passing.

through in 1957 “I remember the first day I discovered just what was in store for myself and the school[sic] because of our experiences with V.D. Treating V.D. the right way may be expensive, but it keeps us going.”

V.D.’s influence is not just limited to sporting at U[sic]GA. V.D. was a big part of the Olympics and worked closely with Billy Payne in the planning of the events. But what really makes V.D. so popular at the farm school is the close, personal contact, which allows V.D. to get into the lives of the athletes. From there on, V.D. is often a part of their lives forever a part often rubs off on those closest to them. Even the mutt uga, the school’s excuse for a mascot, loves V.D. But it is no mystery how that stupid dawg got to know V.D. While the use of this mascot disturbs many, it is nothing new to many u[sic]ga fans that really love that dawg, partially because they believe that the dawg’s doghouse to be one of the world’s major engineering feats.

“Treating V.D. the right way may be expensive, but it keeps us going.”

A random U[sic]GA Alum

Since, coming to u[sic]ga V.D. has been everywhere at the school, an ever-present force at the school. And as always, V.D. will be there Saturday, looking on as the Jackets beat the dawgs while doing their best to avoid any contact V.D. during the game.

It may be observed by the casual reader that V.D. might be construed as an abbreviation of the name of U[sic]GA’s athletic director Vince Dooley. No further comments will be made to confirm or deny this, but we certainly won’t deny it either.

Bowling a good substitute for bowl game

Just because we're not eligible for a bowl doesn't mean you can't get a piece of this year's holiday sports action

By Jimbo Jones
Sports Staph

It seems that due to pure genius, our beloved dawgs may not be eligible for a bowl game this year. Not even the humanitarian bowl.

You see, there are these rules out there about being eligible for these post-season games. You have to have a certain number of wins against "qualified" opponents, which means you can't beat up on small catholic schools from Zimbabwe or all-girls schools.

Wins against teams that are not Division I-A also do not count. Thus, our early season victimization of Georgia Southern doesn't count towards the total, as much as we might like it to. Now lucky for us, we seem to have managed to pull out enough wins, even with this high school game on our schedule.

Our inability to beat any good teams (Tennessee does not count—they are bad this year), has very few bowls interested in picking us up. Our best bet is perhaps to head to beautiful Nashville for the Music City Bowl. Now Nashville is a fine place to go if you are an aspiring country artist (as I'm sure many of you are), but it is hardly the mecca of the college post-season.

Rather than honor any alumni or our fine school who exceeded expectations and learned the fine art of sing-songy poetry with a twang by visiting them in their new home, I have a modest proposal. Why go to a stupid bowl when you could go bowling?

For less than half the price of tickets to the game, and not even

By Eric Hurst / STUDENT PUBLICATIONS

The thought of traveling to a poor game is daunting for many dawg fans. They may find it preferable to spend this holiday bowl season at the local lanes, swilling beer and reminiscing back to when they knew how to write.

considering travel, you can enjoy an evening of fine bowling at the local alley. We even have a better shot of winning at the lanes, because everyone knows that Brother Jeb is well past his prime and can't pick up those tough one-pin spares like he used to.

Much like baseball, cow tipping, and chewing tobacco, bowling is one of the great American past-times, especially in a true southern town such as Athens. The high unemployment rate of UGA's graduates makes Friday night at the alley ideal for re-uniting with old alumni and drop-outs. Why would anyone want to leave Athens anyhow? A plethora of cheap beer and trailer parks makes it a great place both to raise children and to party and reminisce with old, burn-out friends.

Why ante up for $30 bowl game tickets when you already have bowling shoes? At the Bowl-o-rama, on happy hour night, you can bowl for a mere dollar a game, and pitchers of Natural Light (the best brew ever) are at discount prices as well. You can tell the woman to stay at home, or have her on duty retrieving more pitchers as you find yourself running out.

It is also worth noting that should you happen to show up on one of the six nights a week that Jimmy Done-in bowls instead of planning viable football game plans, you have a good chance of winning. You see, his understanding of the game of football is only a little better than his understanding of the game of football, which is just about on par with quarterback Mincy Quarter's comprehension of the English language.

So let's run this down here. You can go to a bowl game, and see Mincy keep pretending he has a prayer of earning the Heisman Trophy, while some guys in red and white Green Bay Packers rip-off uniforms lose the game. Too bad the Sanford leap involves tackling a pig in a pile of slop. It won't even be in a good town like Athens. It'll be in one of them new fangled big cities, even bigger than Macon!

Instead, I suggest you head on down for the holidays and go bowling. You can head on down with your old kindergarten buddies, bring your Sunday shoes, and go to town. Bowl a game, bowl five games. You can do all of that and still have some money left from the allowance you got from your parents to take your sister/wife out to Krystal after the game.

If you can't beat Done-in, you've got issues. Holtz, Spurrier, and Tuberville didn't have a problem. Why, just last week, my sister outbowed him using her one tooth to guide the ball down the alley.

How "V.D." has become an permanent fixture in Georgia history

By El Presidente
Knows about foosball

Many people around the nation cringe at hearing the words venereal disease commonly abbreviated to V.D. But at U[sic]GA, it has a different and special meaning.

For thirty-six years, V.D. has been a big-time player in the U[sic]GA athletic department, as well as in everyday student life. V.D. first appeared as an integral part of the football team. Due to the close nature of the team, V.D. made a huge impact and soon was a major part of other sports such as gymnastics, swimming, volleyball, and tennis.

V.D. truly is not limited in impact just to the athletic department. Many students at the farm school know V.D. very well and have had quite a bit of experience with V.D. during their time at the agricultural school.

According to the UGA website "V.D. has had a great impact on our campus, we are lucky to have V.D. here." Many students and athletes feel the same way. V.D. was partially responsible for the SEC's leading interception thrower and biggest FORMER Heisman candidate hopeful, Quincy Carter, decision to attend the farm school. But not everyone is excited about having V.D. at U[sic]GA. In fact, former coach, Ray Goff, resigned after years of contact with V.D. for personal reasons.

The impact of V.D. is so great at U[sic]GA has been great enough to warrant a large endowment for the library, which bought coloring books for upper level students, picture books for lower level students, as well as a large quantity of books devoted to the study of V.D. The spirit of V.D. is present everywhere at U[sic]GA, from the locker rooms to the parties to the double-wide trailers that successful U[sic]GA fans save up to purchase by brilliant careers in the hamburger-flipping industry.

Yet the price of treating V.D. well, is high, costing the University[sic] nearly $2 million dollars a year. "But to give V.D. the proper treatment is important," justifies a U[sic]GA alum who picked up their U[sic]GA diploma in nose-picking at a McDonald's drive
